Regenerative Ecovillage Development for Resilient Communities; Conservation of Natural and Cultural Heritage; and Ecosystem Restoration

July 9 - 18. UN Headquarters, New York

Located between Rooms E and 11, Level 1B

In the hallway between the Vienna Cafe and the UN Bookstore

This exhibit is being organized by the Global Ecovillage Network (GEN), along with the other 3 organizations listed overleaf. It features Books, Magazines, Videos, Photos, the Ecovillage Playing Cards, Descriptions of our programme activities, and other materials and information.

GEN is a network of empowered citizens living in ecovillage communities, which are among the most sustainable of communities on earth. We are well on our way towards achieving the UN's Sustainable Development Goals.

Our focus on ecosystem restoration is coupled with providing access to renewable energy, water, and sanitation - such as through the building and use of composting toilets, biogas energy systems, clean cook stoves, water retention landscaping, etc. And all of these together, when coupled with the adoption of sustainable consumption and production practices are used in our community planning and implementation processes at a local, regional and national level.

The Ecosystem Restoration Camp Foundation focuses on activities for restoring the natural environment through the development of Ecosystem Restoration Camps, educational courses, restoration activities, and recovery of ecosystem functions on degraded lands at the local and regional scale.

INTO, through its own work and that of its 76 national and member organisations throughout the world, focuses primarily on the conservation of the cultural and natural heritage while also addressing, directly or indirectly, 14 of the SDGs.

The Commons Cluster, a network of EcoSoc accredited individuals and organisations has drafted and will be displaying reports for each of the SDGs addressed at HLPF 2018 with recommendations on using a nature based approach for implementing each of them.
